

In loving memory of Justin's & Jeff's other brother

Two years before Justin was born, Margene delivered a stillborn at Georgia Baptist Hospital. Ten days before the due date, she feared the worst when the kicking stopped. While she was still being tended to, a nurse took me aside and asked if we wanted the hospital to dispose of the body it identified as Baby Boy Eidson. I replied yes, without even thinking of the alternative. When Margene and I drove home in tears, we left behind our first son to be discarded along with the hospital's soiled bandages and other medical waste. Not thinking of giving our child a proper burial will always be one of the greatest failings of my life.