

This prototype is for illustrative purposes only and is not intended for general distribution.

Fighting for the Black Vote

Ramming the Issue of Race & Poverty Down the Throat of the Democratic Party

CAMPAIGN AD IDEA: THE WELFARE HAMMOCK

No one minds helping the needy, but Democrats have turned welfare into a hammock for millions of able-bodied Americans.

A Baltimore mother of four who has been on welfare for 12 years, Kiara said to an interviewer, "I don't need to get a job because I get a check from the government every month." Kiara is black, but there are more white people who live off welfare than any other race.

Under President Obama, 13 million more recipients were added to the food stamp rolls. In a move that exploded food stamp usage, the Obama USDA ran ads that encouraged more people to apply for federal food assistance.

One USDA ad instructed local food stamp offices to host community parties as a way of increasing participation:

"Host a party. Make it fun by having activities like BINGO games, and provide information about signing up for food stamps!"

In addition to basic foods—what food stamps were intended for—food stamp EBT cards are used to purchase gourmet items, such as triple-trimmed tenderloin steaks and other expensive foods most Americans can't afford.

In 2013, 29-year-old California beach bum Jason Greenslate avoided having to work to feed himself by using food stamps to buy lobster and sushi. According to a TV report, welfare pays more than an entry level job in half of all states.

Welfare didn't become a way of life until one party realized that giving away free things could help them build a permanent majority of government dependent voters.

For people of all races, welfare kills the human spirit

johneidson@comcast.net